Dr. Alasdair Conn, Richard Serino

After looking at this article on FEMA deputy administrator and Boston native Richard Serino (<http://memoryholeblog.com/2013/05/21...event-in-2008/>) , I was looking at the MSNBC coverage in the days after, noticed this Dr. Alasdair Conn from Mass General (<http://video.msnbc.msn.com/martin-ba...61429#51561429>) and that he is listed at the same address as FEMA's Serino here (<http://www.corporationwiki.com/Massa...a25012254.aspx>) where "Metropolitan Boston Emergency Medical Services Council, Inc." is located. No smoking gun, to be sure, but maybe worth looking into.

And something else about the script they're reading from - lots of talk of "limbs" when most people say legs - I especially noticed it with that Arredondo character who didn't even know English that well.

Re: The Alleged Medical Witnesses

John Andersen and his wife, Laurie.

John was the mic man in the tent, whilst his wife Laurie was stationed at the entrance. His job was to give direction over the microphone, whilst Laurie was solely responsible for triaging 'victims' as they came through the doors. They have been out in force giving interviews about their experiences to various media outlets, including People magazine, here: <http://www.people.com/people/article...693740,00.html>

However, in keeping with the theme I found out that they also gave an interview to Laura Kranz. She is the same journalist who was present in the tent when they were experiencing problems with the lighting and power. For that reason, I have decided to go with her interview, although they are all broadly similar anyway. It is an interesting read.

the past 15 years. His wife works with him also and was responsible for triaging patients as they came through the doors. This year, the tent became a makeshift trauma unit after the devastating bombs that ripped through the crowd.

You might imagine a scene of pandemonium. Far from it, says Andersen, who tells how the volunteer EMTs, doctors, nurses and other medical staff immediately sprang into orderly action, literally offering the shirts off their backs to assist victims with severe injuries, even as their own lives were potentially in peril.

"There was no chaos at all," says Andersen, a middle-school science teacher and race volunteer who helped to direct the medical team in the tent toward people in need last week. "To watch these people react the way they did to help people without hesitation was so phenomenal – putting their hands on wounds, taking off their jacket and putting it on wounds, taking the shirt off their back and putting it on a wound to hold back the bleeding. There was such calm in the way the tent functioned.

Andersen, who was praised by a doctor in the tent for keeping a sense of calm after the bombings, according to the Boston Globe, says it's remarkable that all the gravely wounded are expected to live," says Andersen. "It still gives me goosebumps and probably will for rest of my life. ... Some people rolled right by me, and I would have bet most of them would have died just by the way they looked. I never saw that before in my life and pray I never will again."

So, yet another reference there to medics using items of clothing to stem bleeds etc. We all keep saying it, but here I go again - why on earth were they taking them there, knowing there was such an appalling lack of facilities? There were 10 hospitals in two mile radius. Loving the line 'Every single person who came into the medical tent is still alive today, and that is such a phenomenal tribute to the people inside the tent'. I will put myself out there and say that if this were real world, NONE of those individuals would of stood a chance in hell of making it out of that tent intact. Even if they survived their initial injuries, the infection rates due to the improper use of dirty items as tourniquets would surely of killed a few off by now?

The article continues:

Quote:

The first injured person he saw was Jeff Bauman, who lost both his legs below the knee but was lauded as a hero for reportedly providing information about the alleged attackers. "He just had nothing below the knees left," Andersen says. "He had two belts that were lifting up the stumps that were holding the blood back, regular belts doctors or other people had given him to use as tourniquets. His face had that whitish-gray look like zombies in a movie, but times a hundred."

"The things that bothered me the most were the lack of color in people's faces, and the sight of the blood," he adds. "When you see someone's bone sticking out of a leg and covered in a brown color you know is blood, or someone goes by and you seeing blood dripping down from the fingers where the hand is supposed to be, those are some of the things that went by me."

Right. How the hell was Jeff the first person through the door? This was not possible, surely? We saw so many 'casualties' being removed from the scene prior to anyone even noticing Jeff and his stumps rolling around on the floor. If Jeff were the first through the door, this would at least make this whole charade more believable, but we know he wasn't. At this point, I feel quite at ease in calling this man an out and out fibber. He continues...

Quote:

...Andersen says he outwardly kept his cool even as he feared for his wife, fellow volunteer and ER nurse Laurie Andersen, who was outside the tent during the blasts – she was unharmed – and worried there might still be other blasts. "I kept saying over and over in the microphone: 'You're all medical professionals. Do what you know how to do,'" Andersen says. "My goal was to protect everybody in the tent and get everyone out alive. ."

The team worked quickly to stabilize patients and get them to ambulances and hospitals as police and bomb-sniffing dogs were moving to evacuate the tent in case of further explosions, explains Andersen.

If I were a medic, some random guy repeatedly telling everyone to 'keep calm' and 'do what you know' over the microphone, would piss me off to be honest. How they all worked so well in the dark is another mystery. I wonder if Laura Krantz queried any issues with the electrics in the tent? If she did, she certainly didn't record them in the sensationalist account above. Another written for drama account, embellished for maximum impact. Hot on dramatic descriptions, yet totally devoid of any true facts.

I am not expecting John to show up in any images as he was allegedly the mic man. Laurie is another matter entirely. She was allegedly stationed right outside the entrance to the tent, triaging 'casualties' as they came through the doors. This is the earliest shot I could find of the unfolding situation re the tent.

She is not there. If anyone spots this lady in any of the photographs, can they please post it, so we can see if there is anything to back up their story. I'd like to get to grips with the 'Jeff being the first person through the door' claims, is all.

Could that be her with the grey sweatshirt on, leaning over the gate with her head down? That woman seems to have the same hair as Laurie, but it's impossible to say for sure since her face isn't visible. If it is, in fact, Laurie, she's not doing a very good job with her triage duties. 🙄

I thought that too, Goodomens97. However, I have since found out she was wearing one of the white adidas jackets with the blue stripe down the arm. There is another woman in the distance looking towards the finish line. She is on the right of the pic. I was wondering if that may of been her also, but the hair seems too short. I'd love a good facial close up from somewhere, but I imagine this is just wishful thinking! I am keeping my eyes open for her though.

Ahh ok. I see who you're talking about in the distance--the hair looks very similar to me, but of course it's impossible to say for sure without seeing her face. Maybe we'll get lucky and find some more photos from outside the medical tent.

Re: The Alleged Medical Witnesses

I would think that the lady in the distance is more than likely Laurie due to the stance. Check out the lower back in both photos. She seems to have what my mother used to call a sway back which causes the backside to jut out.

and

Isn't that the Spielberg lookalike Doctor carrying the patient in?

I definitely see what you mean, Clive. Same body type and same hair--could very well be Laurie. I've been looking for more pictures, but haven't been able to find any new ones yet.

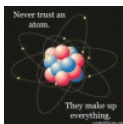

Yes, that does look to be Dr. Levine aka Steven Spielberg's twin wheeling the patient in.

What man in the photo are you referring to Clive? Can you circle him? I wan't to make sure I am looking at the right bloke!

Edit I am as thick as two short planks. 😊 I see him.
